filled to the appeliation, "wonderful." Ail evipus performances of female characters previous performances of female characters by one of the sterner sec, sink into insignificance in comparison to this great artist. Of Mr. Nobles's great drama of Bohemians and De ectives, we can cordially say that it is smuch stronger eventhan the glowing advertisements led us to expect; and improves upon acquaintance. Of Mr. Nobles's acting we need only say that we can heartily ledures the glowing enlogics pronounced upon him by the eastern press. There is a strong element of character in all that he does, his own ir dividuality is always completely lost in the character being portrayed. His disguises as a detactive officer are marvels of art, both in facial make up and vigorous development of facial make up and vigorous development of strongly contrasted characters, and again Mr. Notice has shown himself to be a man of sound judgment by engaging strickly first-class art lis to support him. have come to regard it not so much as a narrative of fictitious charact rs and their imaginary suffer ngs, but as the recital of the undeserved affictions visited upon personal filends, most of whom were dearly loved and highly esteemed. The noble simplicity of the Peggotys, the winning beauty and innocence of little hmily betrayed by the dazzling qualities of the accomplished scoundred Steerforth, the humorous "pecuniary difficulties" of Mr. Micrawber, and the nomerous shifts not always the most respectable—to which he resorts to overcome them, his unfailing confidence and trust that "bouching must turn up," the malevolence and cunning of the slimy, creeping Heep, the lofty parity and goodness of Agues—are all blended so harmoniously that one feels it something like profunction to attempt in separate them and reluce the story to the marrow limits necessary or adapt it to a stage representation. —The restoration of the First metho-list church, on Second street, near Poplar, naving been completed, we were privileged o examine the work, and must compliment fir. Fred. Volkmar, the artistic frescoe sainter, whose tasteful, elegant and simple lessions ernament the walls and ceilings of the church. The style of the painting is of the Grecian order, and throughout strictly the church. The style of the painting is of the Grecian order, and throughout strictly complied with. The pillars on the eastern wall of the church directly in the rear of the pulpit, are painted in imitation of two real pillars in the center, and so well executed that they can hardly be discerned from the others. The frieze and cornice are so perfectly designed and painted, that by an optical fluision the ceiling appears arched and several feet higher than it is in realily. The design of the two rosettes in the center field of the ceiling, from which the chandelers are suspended, is of the richest Corinthian style in limitation of stucco work, and so well painted and stricthestly shaded, that it seems to stand out like genuine relief-work. In general, the painting is among the best we have seen done in this city, and we gladly give Mr. Volkmar his well deserved praise. It would be a great wrong to the ladies of the congregation if we failed to give them the highest credit for their assistance in thoroughly beautifying their church. The Unfortunate "Two Orphans." The New Orleans Picagune of Tuesy says: "It will be remembered that on Sat-tay Judge Hawkins, of the superior district night, the attorneys for plaintiff yesterday filed several affidavits in the superior district court to the effect that the superior district court to the effect that the superior district court to the effect that the superior performance had taken place. Judge Hawkins then i sued a writ of distrings on application of the said attorneys, commanding the civil sheriff to sells the properties, sceneries, profits, siage effects, etc., of the play known as the Timo Orphans as presented by the Cogswell union c quare theatrical company, at the st Char es theater. Between twelve and one o'clock the writ was duly executed by the sheriff's officers, the sale of tioacts interrupted and the effects sells d. Hence it came to pass that the Theo Orphans were not seen at the Old Drary last hight. The attorneys for plaintiffs took out a rule for contempt of court against defendants, who in return for this consideration got out a rule to dissolve the injunction. These rules are to be tried this morning at the session of the superior district court. The result of these legal proceedings can only be surmised, but it is certain that the Cogswell troupe is billed to play the Two Orphans to-night without fall. It would be allowing too much margin for error to anticipat the tactics of the attorneys engaged in the case, but it is probable that the action of Judge Woods, of the circuit court, now at Allanta, will be invoked."

positions or circumstances portrayed by the novelist to produce the greatest possible dramatic effect. And yet even the most skillful of this class have rarely succeeded in doing more than suggetting a fairly resemblance to the personages they have endeavored to repropersonages they have endeavored to reproduce to the sight and hearing of an audience. The costumes and peculiarities of speech or manner may be copied with the utmost possible fidelity, but the subtle essence of both the scene and the character which distinguishes both from the achievements of every other imaginative writer, inevitably escapes, and the result is a feeling of dissatisfaction, of expectation unfulfitled. This, which is necessarily true of all attempts at dramatizations of Dickens's works is pre-eminently true of of Dickens's works is pre-eminently true of 100 fine Velvet Rugs at one-half the usual price,

This latest dramatization of Denid Copperfield is less artistic, and more fragmentary (possibly more spasmodic) in its construction than any of its predecessors, but this blemists was perhaps inseparable from the design to present "Micawber" as the central figure, the action and interest being accelerated or relarded in due proportion to his presence upon or absence from the scene. Whatever opinion may be entertained as to the excellence of the drama, however, there can be no question as to the great merit of Mr. DeBar in his conception and interpretation of the character of "Micawber," He presents the pompous, important, impressionable and variable victim of "pecuniary difficulties" with a distinctive, peculiar humor, and fidelty never attained by any actor who has previously attempted the part. His tragi-conical despair in recounting the culmination of his "difficulties" in a recent encounter with "a minion of power—in short, the turncock of the waterworks;" the ludicrous carnestness with which he consoles himself teat "no man is without a friend who possesses courage and—shaving materials," concluding with the higher that a first class association.

Among the enterprising business firms

Among the enterprising dusiness arms of this city is that of Kahn & Freiberg, whose establishment is at the corner of Msin and Poplar streets. They deal largely in dry goods and all other species of goods perfairing to this line of business, concerning which is their card in another column. Kahn & Freiberg have been in business a long while, during which time they have built up a large and profitable trade by their energy, onterduring which time they have built up a large and profitable trade by their energy, enterprise and reliable dealings. They enjoy an extensive acqualitance throughout the city and the surrounding country, while their great popularity is not exceeded by that of any firm in Memphis. They are noted for their accommodating kindness to all their patrons and friends, and the consequence is that a person who once deals with Kahn & Freiberg will continue to give them their trade. They have just received one of the largest and best stock of goods ever brought to Memphis, and are determined to sell them at very low prices.

we will seil this week an excellent line of Serge Dress Plaids at 25 cts a yard equal to any figures, yet they are determined to sell them at very low prices. This house has always been noted for its low figures, yet they are determined to while their figures are lower than those of any other dry goods house in the city, their prices still lower. While their figures are lower than those of any other dry goods house in the city, their goods are of a superior quality, and embrace all the late novelties of the season. They feel assured that they can give the very best of bargains, and will guarantee to please all who give them a call in fact, it seems strange that fine goods, such as they keep, can be soid at such low figures. But when we remember what a big business Kahn & Freiberg do, their small profits in the long run amount to a sufficient compensation to justify a continuance of the largest and best stock of goods ever brought to Memphis, and are determined to sell them at very low prices.
